Citigate Cunningham Tops The Holmes Report “Best Agencies to Work For” List

SAN FRANCISCO — April 2, 2007 — Today, Citigate Cunningham was recognized as one of the “Best Small Agencies to Work For” by The Holmes Report. Recognition was based on “an enduring commitment to the firm’s original values — among them: be open and honest, make tough decisions and stick to them, have the courage to say no, maintain personal integrity, be a team player — a solid professional development program, work-life balance initiatives (80 percent of employees take advantage of a flexible work option) and a commitment to challenging even junior employees with interesting work.”

“We have an extraordinary group of talent, which makes it all the more gratifying to see our own employees voicing their enthusiasm and appreciation for our agency,” said Paul Bergevin, president of Citigate Cunningham. “We were pleased to see that our employees feel challenged and well rewarded for their dedication and contribution to our agency’s success.”

Participating agencies were asked to distribute a username and password to employees, who were invited to log on and give their anonymous responses to 55 questions covering all aspects of their firm’s culture, from trust in management to compensation to client service. More than 4,000 employees from more than 100 agencies participated in the survey. Their votes were then tallied to produce an overall satisfaction score, and that score was then weighted for agency size and response rate.
